Protecting Business Interests

In a perfect world, goods and services exchange hands, products work properly, services are satisfactory and payment is made. While contracts, whether verbal or written, appear straight-forward, perceptions can be different. Interpretation, communication and circumstances can turn a sound business transaction into a challenge.

In today's complex business environment, it is important to address challenges immediately. Many times, differences of opinion or perception can be avoided when proper legal advice is given. It can be as simple as reviewing a contract and communicating provisions and consequences in writing to close out an open issue. Other times, contracts are silent in areas where there are differences of opinion. When an impasse occurs, it most likely involves compensation for a service or product, or the interpretation of a contract requirement. Significant matters typically involve more comprehensive legal action.

Legal Options

When agreements go awry and a resolution cannot be reached, companies must seek legal counsel to weigh options and determine the best course of action.

Outside counsel can provide an unbiased review of the situation, feedback and interpretation and options for recourse. Often, the issues become personal and emotional.

Weighing options and determining starting points from which to approach the other party can be huge first steps in a speedy resolution. Options can include:

Mediation

A neutral professional is brought in by both parties and their counsel to help find common ground, compromise and agreement.

*Brought in by Both Parties
Non-Binding*

Arbitration

At the request of the parties or a judge, a neutral professional is retained to assess the issue, make a determination and identify a resolution.

*Sometimes Court-Approved
Can be Binding or Non-Binding*

Litigation

Usually a last resort, a clear impasse can lead to litigation. A trial evaluates the impasse along with the applicable law and will bring closure to a dispute.

*Trial | Binding
Clear Winner and Loser*
